Happy Fall Yall! The first month of school has been a blast with your little ones. We have finished up on our unit “all about me” and are now studying “farm” in anticipation of our upcoming field trip. Each day the children are doing a combination of “choose to” and “have to” activities to practice new skills. Some of the things we have continued to work on have been body parts, vocabulary, prepositions, and counting. The kids are also beginning to settle into the routines and procedures and all of our volunteers have started. We are now starting to get into the “flow” of things and Mr. Red and I are super excited because this is when the “magic” starts to happen ☺ It takes the first few weeks of school for the children to develop trust and understand the rules and procedures. Since that is all now starting to come together it allows them to be able to focus more on learning skills and less on learning new behaviors and expectations.

Volunteer Spotlight

"Hi! My name is Autumn Pilgreen and I am a senior at North Carolina State University. I am currently studying psychology in hopes of becoming an occupational therapist. I am so excited to be volunteering at the Frankie Lemmon School this year! Go Pack!"

Autumn will be volunteering with us every Friday this semester.
